ST. MICHAEL'S HOSPITAL GRADUATION EXERCISES*Convocation Hall, May 30, 1960

Address by

REV. JOHN M. KELLY, C.S.B., President, St. Michael's College

Some three years ago I first met this group of young ladies when they began their course at St. Michael's Hospital School of Nursing. It is a great pleasure and honour to salute them today, on the occasion of their graduation.

They probably have mixed feelings today. They are glad to have finished, as everyone is happy to have completed successfully a job they set out to do. They probably have some nostalgic feelings also, for, in spite of the rigours of apprenticeship, I'm sure they have been happy years. In any case they are well aware today that they haven't really finished anything. They have only reached the end of the beginning of their lives of nursing.

They are beginning life in an ancient and honourable profession and I can say of them what can be said of the medical profession in general, viz. that society expects more of them than it does of the average run of citizen. Their training has prepared them to meet this higher standard. There are two things that the School of Nursing is prepared to say of them today.

(a) They know something — and because they do they are worthy of the public's confidence and trust.

(b) They are something. They have been submitted to a moral and personal discipline, designed to eliminate self-centeredness from their lives; and on this score they are presented to you today as young people dedicated to a career of service to mankind.

And it is here that we are face to face with what constitutes the greatest dignity and nobility of the nurse, her consecration and devotion to other men.

Nurses don't deal just with bodies, or parts of bodies. They deal with people, human persons. They don't minister to just physical needs but human needs and personal needs. And since they deal with persons, they deal with the highest, most noble and most important beings in the entire universe. They deal with life, but it is not just organic life or vegetable life; it is human life. While it is true that their proper concern is one aspect of human life, it remains always human life. They don't deal with bodies. They deal with men. And anyone who knows very much about men knows that they are very complex unities which resist divisions under penalty of death or madness. Men are men and not bodies or souls or spirits. Each aspect of man affects the whole man, each part has repercussions in the whole. It is these whole persons whom nurses serve and not, as some suppose, artificially and unrealistically truncated and separated parts.

They deal with life in one of its dimensions but they are brought face to face with the other dimensions of life, for here the dimensions are inseparable from each other.

And just because she is dealing with human life, the nurse is afforded an opportunity of understanding it better. She has an opportunity to escape one of the great banes of existence, the temptation to shallowness and superficiality. She, more than most, should become acquainted with the worthwhileness of human life. Indeed her whole life is a declaration of the worthwhileness of man and life and it is precisely because of this reason that a nurse should be a living reassurance to other people, a cause of joy, and a guarantee of dignity.

A nurse will see men at their best but also at their worst, for sickness brings out what is in a man. She can be an aid to greatness, frequently she might be the means of escape from smallness, resentment and despair.

Today, as you graduate from your novitiate and take your place as a full-fledged member of your profession, I should like to assure you of the nobility of your profession. It will have its humdrum aspect; it will have its routine; it will have its sorrows; it will have its rewards and joys. It is a life and all these things characterize life. But at the centre of them all you will, if you keep your eyes and hearts open, find greatness and mystery, and your lives should never be dull.

There are just two counsels which I should like to leave with you:

(a) Always try to maintain a standard of excellence. A false interpretation of the meaning of democracy has made deep inroads into our society. It amounts to saying that the least common denominator is good enough. The traditional and indeed the only acceptable meaning of democracy is that the best should be available to all. Never be satisfied with just getting by. Eschew the mediocre performance. Be convinced that, if what you do is worthwhile doing, it is worthwhile doing well. Avoid the shoddy performance. This is the only way of escape from boredom and even vulgarity. (b) Have a sense of humour. We are really not human unless we possess this faculty. Man is the only risible animal, which means that of all the things on earth, we alone can laugh.

(i) Learn to laugh at yourself. This is another way of saying don't take yourselves too seriously. I said earlier that nurses should be unselfish. This really means that they should be able to transcend their own littleness and, from this higher point of vantage, be amused at their own vanities.

(ii) If you have a sense of humour you won't mistake the unimportant for the important or vice versa.

Humour has been defined as the recognition of the juxtaposition of the incongrous — (unimportant people in important jobs, making mountains out of molehills, headaches taken as mortal catastrophes) — You will have to have this to maintain your sanity. The humanistic ideal is to have a sound mind in a sound body. Presumably as nurses you will do the best you can to have this latter and if you keep your sense of humour, you will have the former.

NEWS NOTES

Front page news from the Winnipeg Tribune showed a picture of Betty Lou Irwin Pitura, 1959 graduate assisting the mayor and officials at the opening of the Community Chest Drive in Winnipeg. Betty Lou is actively engaged in V.O.N. work there. We are glad and proud that she has the community spirit.

Betty Lou's mother, Kathleen Darragh Irwin, we remember entertained us with a spectacular Fashion Show last year.

Steven Sherwood, son of Marjorie Allen Sherwood '51 was crowned the grand champion of the Canadian National Exhibition baby show.

Our congratulations!

From a letter to Kay Guys from Rita Hefferman Walsh: she writes that while attending a A.N.A. Convention at Nautilus Hotel, Miami Beach, as a private duty delegate from New Jersey she had a real thrill when she bumped into Essie Taylor Smith, also a delegate from Passadena, California. They hadn't seen each other since their class reunion in 1950.

The annual Alumnae Christmas Dinner, unfortunately, has had to be postponed from December 7th, until Thursday, January 12th, 1961.

The dinner will be held at the Town and Country Club at 6:30 p.m.

Please keep January 12th for our "Get Together".

CONGRATULATIONS

To Miss Mary Shaver '45, who obtained her Master degree from Wayne University and to Misses Ann Ford '55 and Anita McDonnell '53, who were awarded their Bachelor of Science degrees from Ottawa University.

Our congratulations and good wishes to Sister St. Maurus on the occasion of her golden jubilee.
